Conversations on the Frontier: Finding the Dialogic in Nineteenth-century Anthropological Archives

June 2019 · History Workshop Journal

 Jason M. Gibson ·  Helen Gardner

While anthropological archives tend to be named after the collector of the material, they are often the product of conversations and long-term engagements with informants. Focusing on the concept of the dialogic, this article contends that these materials ought to be equally conceived as co-productions, often made via complex, asymmetrical researcher/researched engagements. We specifically home ... [\[Show full abstract\]](#)
